A darky who was a passenger on the train was unlucky enough to lose his hat out of the window, and a moment after, when the conductor passed him, requested him to stop the train and let him get it. Upon the conductor's refusal to grant his absurd request, the darky drew a pistol, and, poking it in his face, ordered him to stop the train at once on penalty of death. Quick as a flash the conductor knocked the weapon from his hand, slapped the darky down, and sat on him until time to ring the bell for the next station.

The testimony presented was in effect that that the two women were at "outs," and meeting at a church festival, being held on Cansey street Saturday night, each began provoking the other by remarks and conduct calculated to bring on the "overt act." LOCAL TRAVEL.

The local passenger travel has been for some time very light, but it is probable it has now reached its lowest ebb. In reply to a question an agent of one of the principal Eastern lines said yesterday that the sale of tickets out of the city had been dwindling for several weeks, but he hoped to see it pick up again in the next week or two.

reasing. Few people have any idea of he number of persons who pass through he city every day. The trains are nearly ill full, and there seems to be very little ariation day by day." variation day by day."

"To what do you attribute the decrease in travel out of Memphis?"

"The reason is very plain. For several months, especially while the Louisville Exposition was in full blast, tickets were sold at a very low rate—low enough to tempt people who would otherwise never think of travel. They went simply because they could do so cheaply, and hundreds of them, I have no doubt, derived very little real pleasure from their trips. They had to be too quickly made, and were therefore very tiresome. Then there are others who like to travel, but never take are others who like to travel, but never take a trip except when they can do so at a very small outlay. These people are what might be called excursion fiends—the kind who take two seats, insist upon having the the excursion rates, which were ridicu-lously low, a chromo being actually given by some roads. A large number of busi-ness men, who usually go East to pur-chase their goods later in the season, an-ticipated the time by a few weeks, which they could easily do. All these causes swelled the volume of travel enormously.

"How about freights."

"We have all the business we can possibly do. All the roads are doing a heavy freight business, and new cars can hardly be provided for. On several occasions there has been a temporary blockade, and it has been necessary to refuse shipments. We are all getting into better shape now, however, and will be able to handle everything easily in the future."
